Philanthropy New York's 36th Annual Meeting

Message from the President and Board Chair

Welcome to Philanthropy New York’s 36th Annual Meeting! It is deeply gratifying to have so many of our members join us for a day of learning, sharing and networking. With our Annual Meeting, we strive to present a day packed with substantial, thought-provoking ideas from which members employing a diverse array of funding strategies can draw practical lessons and inspiring stories.

This year’s Annual Meeting begins with the business of our organization. We will review our Fund for 2025 campaign, which has been a great success and positions us to increase the capacity of the region’s philanthropic sector over the next decade. We will preview our new Philanthropy Center at 1500 Broadway and elect new board members.

International grantmaking covers a wide range topics – education, health care, social justice, women and girls, housing, economic development and human rights, to name just a few. Every day we are witnessing new developments across the globe that illuminate the great impact philanthropy can have, how tenuous gains can be, and how essential it is to nurture local partnerships with the right organizations. As more and more funders recognize the connections between social challenges here in the United States and the evolving conditions abroad, this is a particularly opportune time to host these critical conversation.

We’re excited to bring back the popular “PHIL Talks” from last year’s program. These rapid fire presentations will feature speakers who are working on the ground in three very different contexts. We’ll follow that up with our main presentation, which focuses on issues associated with human rights, health, economic development and the role of international agencies and philanthropy in contributing to sustainable progress.

For anyone who would like to be a part of the development of programming and resources focused on international action, we invite you to get involved in Philanthropy New York’s International Grantmakers Network. We hope that today’s conversation will inform future discussions on the great potential and challenges associated with international grantmaking. Thank you for joining us and contributing to this growing conversation. And, a special thanks to our very generous hosts, JPMorgan Chase & Co.

Philanthropy New York publicly launched the Fund for 2025 in October 2014. The response from members and individuals in the philanthropic community was spectacular. By the end of the year it was clear that we would be able to meet our fundraising goals and, beyond the initially modest Fund for 2025 budget, assemble the capital necessary to fund the budget for the 10-year capacity building plan. By April 2015, the Fund for 2025 had attracted grants and commitments totaling approximately $3.7 million.

We could not have accomplished this goal without the generous support from individual contributors and our members.

Nicholas D. Kristof, Columnist
The New York Times

Nicholas D. Kristof, a columnist for The New York Times since 2001, is a two-time Pulitzer Prize winner who writes op-ed columns that appear twice a week.

Mr. Kristof grew up on a sheep and cherry farm near Yamhill, Oregon. He graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Harvard College and then studied law at Oxford University on a Rhodes Scholarship, graduating with first class honors. He later studied Arabic in Cairo and Chinese in Taipei. Mr. Kristof has lived on four continents, reported on six, and traveled to more than 150 countries, plus all 50 states, every Chinese province and every main Japanese island. During his travels, he has had unpleasant experiences with malaria, mobs and an African airplane crash.

After joining The New York Times in 1984, initially covering economics, he served as a Times correspondent in Los Angeles, Hong Kong, Beijing and Tokyo. He also covered presidential politics and is the author of the chapter on President George W. Bush in the reference book The Presidents. He later was Associate Managing Editor of the Times for Sunday editions.

In 1990 Mr. Kristof and his wife, Sheryl WuDunn, then also a Times journalist, won a Pulitzer Prize for their coverage of China's Tiananmen Square democracy movement. They were the first married couple to win a Pulitzer for journalism. Mr. Kristof won a second Pulitzer in 2006, for commentary for what the judges called "his graphic, deeply reported columns that, at personal risk, focused attention on genocide in Darfur and that gave voice to the voiceless in other parts of the world." He has also won other prizes including the George Polk Award, the Overseas Press Club award, the Michael Kelly award, the Online News Association award and the American Society of Newspaper Editors award.

Rana Sabbagh, Executive Director
Arab Reporters for Investigative Journalism

Rana Sabbagh, executive director at Arab Reporters for Investigative Journalism (ARIJ) since 2005, has dedicated the last 31 years of her career as journalist, columnist and media trainer to promote free speech, independent and free media and human rights.

She helped set up (ARIJ) – www.arij.net – a media support network spreading the culture of “accountability journalism”, still a rarity, in newsrooms and among media students in Jordan, Syria, Lebanon, Egypt, Iraq, Yemen, Palestine, Bahrain and Tunisia. A former chief editor of the Jordan Times (1999-Jan 2002), she became the first Arab female in the history of the Levant to run a daily political newspaper. She was sacked by the then government of Ali Abu el Ragheb after she commissioned reports on rioting in the Southern city of Ma’an in 2002, against the wishes of the government, which controls 66% of shares at the Jordan Press Foundation (JPF), publisher of the Jordan Times and the Arabic newspaper Al Rai.

She was correspondent for Reuters International News Agency (1987-1997) in Jordan and the Gulf. She was the first journalist to break news on anti-government riot in the city of Ma’an in 1988, forcing the late King Hussein to cut short his state visit to Washington, fire the government, lift martial law and implement the country's first multiple elections since 1967. She covered the peace process up to the signing of the 1994 Jordan-Israel peace treaty and travelled to border areas inside Israel in violation of a law banning contact between Jordanians and Israelis then due to the prevailing state of no-peace, no-war.

She helped establish Jordan's latest independent newspaper, Al-Ghad (2003-2004). At the personal request of the then GID Chief Saad Kheir, she was pushed to leave the paper because of her bi-weekly columns tackling corruption, lack of reform and continued human rights. She serves as on the board of Global Investigative Journalism Network (GIJN), is member of the Beirut-based Samir Kassir Award for Freedom of the Press, and former member of the jury committee of the UNESCO-Guillermo Cano World Press Freedom Prize 2011-2015.

Johanna Satekge, Site Coordinator
Ramakgopa Clinic, mothers2mothers

Losing a child once is tragic, twice is just something no mother should ever have to experience. Johanna Satekge is a Site Coordinator for mothers2mothers (m2m) at Ramakgopa Clinic in Limpopo, South Africa. Johanna was diagnosed with HIV in 2000 while pregnant. Although she had been told she was going to die, she did give birth to a baby boy only to lose him seven months later on a day that has come to represent tragedy for many...9/11. With her son's death, Johanna thought she would surely be next.

Johanna realised that more and more people were dying from AIDS around her and she could no longer be silent about her infection. She disclosed her status on a community radio station where people called to ask her many questions. The national Department of Health heard the radio interview and recruited her to become a lay councilor.

Three years later, Johanna became pregnant once more, this time giving birth to a baby girl. Her little girl also died at seven months, two weeks after she was started on HIV treatment, too late for it to take effect. Finally, in 2007, Johanna gave birth to a healthy, strong and HIV-negative son.

Johanna joined m2m two years later after being introduced to the organization by her clinic. In her role as Site Coordinator, she oversees day-to-day operations for m2m's local service delivery operations, providing crucial education and support to mothers living with HIV to prevent mother-to-child transmission of HIV (PMTCT). She and her team educate expectant mothers about PMTCT and maternal and child health subjects including: nutrition, safe sex practices, HIV/AIDS treatment, best feeding options, reproductive health and family planning, grief counselling, and general health maintenance for mother and child.

Additionally, Johanna is a Spokesperson for m2m, providing community outreach on subjects including combating stigma and promoting HIV/AIDS awareness and testing.

Over the years, Johanna has touched the lives of thousands of women, helping them prevent their babies from contracting HIV, and losing them as she did. She now has two HIV-negative children and believes she's the richest woman in the world.

International Grantmaking for Small- to Mid-Sized Foundations

July 9, 2015, 2:45 p.m. – 5:00 p.m.

Helmsley Charitable Trust, 230 Park Avenue, Suite 659

To better understand the common challenges faced by smaller foundations committed to international progress, Philanthropy New York is organizing an initial meeting of such foundations to share ideas and identify the best way to support such organizing in the future.
